In recent years, philosophers have increasingly utilized and criticized the term “Anthropocene” while pursuing questions related to the meaning of the human, nature, where precisely responsibility for the current ecological crisis lies, and the relationship between philosophy and science more generally. Moreover, the concept of the Anthropocene requires us to consider important practical and ethical questions: Can living in the Anthropocene be sustainable in the long term, or would moving beyond the Anthropocene even be possible? This conference aims to develop these and related questions.
